Surplus funds may be deposited to the home loan account during the interest only and fixed rate two-year period, as well as after this period has expired. Surplus funds will reduce the outstanding balance.

Can the repayment amount change in the two-year period?

The repayment can still change. The rate is being fixed, but any fluctuations in your outstanding balance could alter your repayment. Examples of this could include property insurance financed through your home loan which increases annually, or you could forfeit or gain concession rate benefits which will be applied to your loan. In addition, should you deposit or access surplus funds, once this becomes available, the change in outstanding balance would alter your repayment amount. It is important to note that the repayment is not fixed, but the interest rate is.

What is the impact of entering into a two-year interest only agreement, and how does it affect the repayments compared to paying both capital and interest?

When you choose interest-only for the first two years, your monthly payments are lower at the start — but your loan balance does not decrease during that time. This means the bank must still recover the full capital over fewer months. As a result, your instalment increases after month 24, and you end up paying more total interest over the life of the loan.

When you choose to pay interest only for the first 24 months:

1. You do not reduce your loan balance during those 24 months.
With a normal loan, your balance would already be decreasing, which lowers future interest.
2. After 24 months, the bank must still recover the entire capital — but now in a shorter period (216 months instead of 240).

This means:

- Your instalment will be higher after month 24, interest rate of 10% per annum. For simplicity, fees and possible insurance have been excluded.
- And you will pay more total interest over the life of the loan.
